The Journal of Strategic Studies Background:

Entering its 40th year, The Journal of Strategic Studies has taken a lead in promoting fresh thinking in the field among scholars and practitioners alike. Over the course of its history, the Journal has been committed to multi-disciplinary approaches to the study of war. It has featured articles that challenge our historical understanding of humanity's efforts to achieve political ends through the application of military and diplomatic means; articles on contemporary security and theoretical controversies of enduring value; and of course articles that explicitly combine the historical and theoretical approaches to the study of modern warfare, defense policy and modern strategy.
