

Center for Strategic and Budgetary Assessments

IN THE NEWS

‘Swarm’ Strikes Are the U.S. Military’s Worst Fear

January 17, 2018 The National Interest

By: Dave Majumdar

Related Expert: Mark Gunzinger

“I think non-kinetic solutions are very promising,” Center for Strategic and Budgetary Assessments airpower analyst Mark Gunzinger, a former U.S. Air Force B-52 pilot, told The National Interest. “Trying to create a ‘steel wall’ might be of some help, and by that, I mean rapid-firing guns. Targeting these guns against multiple drones that are dispersed and may be attacking from multiple quadrants would be a significant problem, of course. For a high-power RF defense, you could probably swivel an emitter quite rapidly to different quadrants to place multiple threats within its beam width.”