

Center for Strategic and Budgetary Assessments

Doyle Hodges

Non-Resident Senior Fellow

Doyle Hodges is a scholar of national security and defense, who from 2019-2023 was Executive Editor of the Texas National Security Review (TNSR). From 1992-2013, he served as a naval officer, commanding a salvage ship forward deployed to Sasebo, Japan and the USS Ross (DDG 71), a destroyer homeported in Norfolk, Virginia. His analysis has appeared in Lawfare, War on the Rocks, TNSR, and The Washington Post. He currently teaches at Princeton University and George Mason University and previously taught at the U.S. Naval Academy and the U.S. Naval War College. He holds a doctorate in international security studies from Princeton University, masters degrees from Princeton, the U.S. Naval War College, and the University of Maryland, College Park, and an undergraduate degree from the U.S. Naval Academy.

Education

M.A. and Ph.D. in International Security Studies

Princeton University School of Public and International

M.A.

U.S. Naval War College

M.A.

The University of Maryland, College Park

B.S.

U.S. Naval Academy

Areas of Expertise

- Asia-Pacific
- Indo-Pacific Security
- Defense Policy
- Force Structure